Both at the hearing on the motions to suppress and at the trial on the merits, cross-examination of a witness by one defense counsel may be adopted by the other, and any evidence adduced on any cross-examination may be taken advantage of by all defendants. Objections to questions on behalf of one defendant will be considered taken on behalf of all unless counsel for a defendant states that he does not wish the objection to be applicable to his client and desires the admission of the evidence to which the objection applies.
